A Female Forger.

The Reading Pa. Eagle says:—It was on Tuesday of this week that a young lady entered Bushong's bank, and stepped up to the window of the paying-teller. The lady proved to be the daughter of a respectable citizen residing in a romantic spot on the outskirts of the city. She is about twenty-two years of age, quite prepossessing in appearance, affable manners and very well educated. She presented a check purporting to be signed by her father, who is and has been a regular depositor in the bank for quite a number of years. With the check she passed in the bank book. The paying-teller, Mr. Harner, eyed the check, then the young lady, and considering that so large an amount of money was to be drawn by the young lady when her father might just as well have come to the bank himself, inasmuch as he was seen on Penn street almost every day, the paying-teller became somewhat suspicious, and directed the attention of Mr. Henry Bushong to the case.

Mr. Bushong came from his private office, and upon recognizing the young lady as the daughter of the person in whose name the check was drawn, and not thinking that so respectable a lady would be guilty of committing so gross a crime as forgery, he directed the money to be paid. This was done, and out came every cent of the old gentleman's bank balance, with the exception of some $60. The young lady took the money, went up to a side desk very coolly, rolled the bills up very carefully, placed them in her portemonnaie, and very innocently stepped out of the bank.

At her parents' house things moved on very smoothly. The beautiful and only daughter had left, as she stated, for the purpose of making a call and remaining down town with an intimate lady friend until the next day. The parents had consented to her going, knowing full well that there she should meet the object of her adoration. This person was a handsome young foreigner, a comparative stranger, good-looking, genteelly dressed, and not over 24 years of age. Tuesday night came and passed, and on Wednesday the old gentleman discovered that his bank-book had been mislaid.—Searching the premises thoroughly it was not to be found. He immediately went to Bushong's bank and made his loss known. "Why," said an attaché of the bank, "your book is not lost; your daughter brought it with her yesterday when she drew out that money." "Drew out what money?" asked the father in utter astonishment. And then was told the facts of the daughter's banking transaction, the amazing intelligence can be better imagined than described. The father then told the story of the strange foreign gentleman who had been paying attentions to his daughter, and was suspicious of forgery and eloquent rose in the old man's mind. The young lady's friend was visited, but she knew nothing of the whereabouts of the missing daughter, and had not seen her for several days. Then the terrible facts had become plain; the beautiful daughter had truly committed forgery and had eloped.

The check was shown, and was found to have been drawn up in the lady's hand writing, and the signature, which was very nicely and accurately imitated, is supposed to have been written by her lover. The daughter had never been to the bank before.

Who her lover is, is not definitely known. He arrived in this city a short time ago, formed the young lady's acquaintance through flattery, it is thought, and so managed affairs as to induce the innocent young girl to participate in the direct robbery of her father's dollars. It is supposed that the pair left Reading for New York on the afternoon train, and are there on a high road to ruin, spending the money in a jolly trip to lands far distant from home. The daughter left no word, sign, nothing behind to tell the story of her flight. The parents are in total darkness as to her whereabouts, which places them in a very sad situation. Previous to this act she had always been a kind, modest and obedient child, loved by her parents and respected by a large circle of admiring friends, and this sudden blow is severely felt by those most intimately connected with the family.

The names of the parties are withheld, out of respect to the good names of the parents of the erring daughter. It is to be hoped that the steps taken to secure the male wretch and his prize will prove successful. Whether the twin are married, or whether the foreigner will only be true to his paramour until the money is all gone remains to be seen.
